

Report HTML & CSS CA – Andreas Halvorsen Tollånes

I should prophase this by saying I've been under the weather and have only gotten two days' worth of work done. I should have asked for an extension. I also had to use last Monday on the previous project. I most likely have to redo this CA.

Researching

I first started looking around at other tour sites with similar looking designs as to what I wanted to use. Taking inspiration from several. My original idea consisted of making a trail that would show map points and describe the location with a picture of this landmark. This would also include the level 2 process of this assignment as a core design element.

I really quickly had an idea the first day when I went to bed and had to sketch it. It doesn't show at all on the page but I wanted to add in a dashed line down the site and under the mailing list to tie everything together.

Production

Setting up the base html structure didn't take very long, I knew I would reuse the map section so I could just copy it and change a little bit of it. I found a nice looking hero image that would be the center piece of the front page, as I chose a full size landing page with hints that there are more below like the arrow pointing to the trail I wanted to put in. I picked colors from this hero image to be my main color theme so that they would fit together.